PRESIDENT'S OFFICECONFERENCE OF HIGHER EDUCATION
COMMISSION TO BE HELD AT WARWICK

The 11th annual Conference of the Philadelphia Commission on Higher Education will be held at the Warwick Hotel, Nov. 26, with the theme, "The Social Obligations of Higher Education ."

The conference will open at 9:00 A.M. with greetings from La Salle College President Brother Daniel Bernian, F.S.C., Ph.D., Chairman of the Commission, and John W. Bodine, Esq., conference chairman.

Dr. John R. Coleman, President of Haverford College, will deliver the morning address. Mayor James H.J. Tate will welcome the interstate audience on behalf of the City of Philadelphia.

Five workshops examining the current social commitment of Philadelphia area colleges and universities will be held during the morning session. They are (with chairman in parenthesis): Strengthening the Regional Economy (Dr. Jean Paul Mather); Serving Community Health Needs (Dr. Joseph Hirsh); Discovering and Developing Human Resources (Mr. Charles G. Simpson); Meeting Metropolitan Manpower Needs (Hon. W. Thacher Longstreth) and Finding Solutions to Problems of Urban Living (Mr. Edwin H. Folk).

Following lunch, which will be served in the Warwick Ballroom at 12:30 P.M., the five workshop chairmen will present summaries of the salient points of their meetings. The principal afternoon speaker will be Dr. Herman R. Branson, President-elect of Central State University, Ohio.

The conference will conclude with a statement on methods of implementing recommendations from the morning and afternoon sessions by Mr. Maurice B. Fagan, secretary-treasurer of the commission and Executive Director of the Fellowship Commission.

The public is welcome to attend the conference. Reservations should be made early by writing the Commission's office at 516 City Hall Annex, Philadelphia, Pa. 19107, or calling MU 6-5328.

THEME OF CONFERENCE DISCUSSED

Brother Daniel Bernian, the chairman of the Commission on Higher Education, said that the theme of the above conference, The Social Obligations of Higher Education, is "Especially pertinent to our day."

"It speaks to the question of how deeply involved colleges and universities should become in 'social engineering' or reconstruction of society," he added.

"Traditionally, institutions of higher education have viewed their role as one of dispassionate enquiry into intellectual problems of enduring quality. Relatively little attention has been paid to immediate social problems except by specialized bureaus of institutes which bore a tenuous relationship to some universities. The 'ivory tower' posture was the common characterization.

"The traditional role of colleges and universities is now being challenged by an urbanized society with problems which cry out for solution. As faculty and students demand an activist role for their institutions, trustees and administrators are increasingly persuaded that their fate is tied up with the society of which they are part.

"It seems inevitable that higher education will be drawn into the maelstrom of the social storm that is sweeping around us in cities throughout the nation. It would be foolish to pretend otherwise. Whatever colleges and universities might wish for themselves, they can scarcely hope to survive as intellectual islands lost in a sea of urban rot and despair. The fate of one is likely to be the fate of another."

Charles Abrams, city planner at Columbia University recently spoke of this relationship between the academic and urban communities in an interview with the New York Times. He expressed the view that an urban university is responsible for the three functions of education, research and service. The university and its neighbors, he urged, are "part of a joint venture." The real world is next door and the community is the classroom."
